It was a well-organized seminar bringing up current issues in financial analysis and how the crisis has affected the understanding of credit risk. It was useful in raising more awareness in the changing approach we all have to follow in looking at and interpreting figures and building up expected figures both short-term and long-term.
Risk manager, European Bank

Overview

Buyers and sellers of goods and services and their intermediaries each face various risks when engaging in both domestic and international trade. Financing those trade transactions using available products from banks and others also involves a wide variety of risks.

This course identifies and explains credit- and other key risks involved in trade and how these can be mitigated in practice as well as the nature of the trade finance products available and how they can be used.

Who should attend

This course is designed for credit and finance professionals together with risk management, sales, vendor management and internal audit management and staff and recently delegates from legal, IT, software firms and HR have attended.

Course Information

What Does It Cover?

Credit risk, traditional working capital vs trade finance, international and cross border trade, banking relationships, INCOTERMS, the dynamics of the risk ladder, payments and systems, silent confirmations, bonds, guarantees, transferring risk to the insurance markets, export agencies and residual risk cover, letters of pledge, trust receipts and warehouse warrants and much more.

Learning Objectives

Delegates will achieve a thorough understanding of credit – and other key risks as they relate to trade finance and international trade including

- The changes to trade finance and the market
- The role of Incoterms
- The nature of financial documents
- The key elements and risk associated with trade finance
- The risk mitigation available

“The course has absolutely helped me to gain an understanding of Finance products.”
